The Action Sports Market

What started as a niche activity defined by rebellious youth performing outrageous stunts, action sports have now firmly entrenched themselves in the threads of American society. This year more than 22 million athletes will participate in “extreme sports” like skateboarding, BMX riding, surfing, and snowboarding.

As recently as 15 years ago action sports had little to no presence on the national stage. Participants were labeled as delinquents and were chastised for their unconventional use of public spaces. That perception began to change in mid 1990s as the youth of America became enchanted with these counter-culture, non-traditional sports and the daring enthusiasts that participated in them. Driven by athletes who constantly test the boundaries of impossible, action sports culture is now a mainstream lifestyle that heavily influences billions of dollars of consumer spending.

Advertisers are using action sports as an effective way to keep their brands “cool” in the minds of America’s youth. These consumers are wary of traditional marketing tactics but are receptive to brands that truly embrace and support their culture. Action sports participants are strong influencers within the 12- to 28-year-old demographic, and marketing savvy companies are finding innovative ways to connect with them. Brands like Mountain Dew, Panasonic, Toyota, and Right Guard are examples of the wide array of industries that are making significant investments to reach action sports enthusiasts. By partnering with Active, companies can gain access to this market in a way that captures the spirit of these participants.

Three out of five U.S. teenagers watch extreme sports.

There are more than 300 action sports competitions around the world each year, generating $100 million in media investment.

There are an estimated 1,800 skateparks in the U.S., up from 200 in 1996.

Action Sports Facts and Figures

Why Action Sports Enthusiasts are Attractive to Marketers

Skateboarding is by far the most popular action sport with 12 million Americans who participate each year and 4.7 million frequent participants who skate more than 30 days per year. 80% of skateboarders are between the ages of 7 and 17 with an average age of 14. Over the past ten years skateboarding has also seen increased acceptance by households that earn more than $75K per year. 38% of skateboarders come from such households compared to 23% in 2000 and 15% in 1995. Like the other action sports, skateboarding is predominantly male at 75%.

Snowboarding has also experienced incredible growth over the last 10 years. There are now 6 million participants in the U.S., of which 2.5 million ride more than 10 days per year. Also attracting a young demographic, 60% of participants are between the ages of 17 and 24 with an average age of 19. Snowboarding is also moving up the income scale with 42% coming from households with income above $75K versus 26% in 2000.

Surfing has natural similarities with skateboarding and snowboarding, however the need for ocean waves severely restricts participation. Despite this, surf culture and lifestyle has perhaps the strongest influence on mainstream society of all action sports. There are 1.1 million surfers in the U.S. of which 700,000 are frequent participants who get into the water more than 20 days per year. Almost 50% of surfers are between the ages of 12 and 24, however participation is much more evenly distributed than the other action sports. 50% of surfers have a household income above $75K and the sport has been increasingly accepted as status sport like golf or tennis within some regions.

The only non-board sport in this group, BMX riding, comes in three different forms; racing, freestyle, and dirt jumping. There are 2.6 million participants in the U.S. and 700,000 who ride more than 52 days per year. Additionally, 400,000 enthusiasts ride more than 100 days each year. 70% of participants are under the age of 24 and only 12% have a household income above $75K. BMX racing will also be an Olympic sport for the first time in 2008 in Beijing.
Since 1995 snowboarding has experienced 160% growth in total participation and a 257% increase in frequent participation. Skateboarding has seen increases of 160% and 213%.

Action sports generate $12.1 billion in annual U.S. retail sales, including $1.5 billion in skate shoes alone.

The IASC has designated June 21 national “Go Skateboarding Day.”

Action Sports Facts and Figures

Skateboarding: 12 million total skaters and 4.7 million frequent participants.
Snowboarding: 6 million total boarders and 2.5 million frequent participants.
BMX Biking: 2.8 million total bikers and 700,000 frequent participants.
Surfing: 1.1 million total surfers and 900,000 frequent participants.

With young, influential participants, action sports are the perfect vehicle for marketers targeting American teens.

As action sports have grown from niche to mainstream, participants have increasingly come from higher income homes.

There are nearly 3 million more female skateboarders and snowboarders than in 1995.
